Returning to work

We understand you have asked us as your GP to make a decision about your return to face to face work, having been directed to us by your employer.

As you are not in the extremely high-risk group that has been advised to shield by the government, this is not a decision for us to make. Your employer will need to do a risk assessment with you to decide on your return to work. This risk assessment takes into account not only your health conditions, but the details of your work place. This may require occupational health input and we would be happy for your employer to write to us (with your consent) for a private report that might help the occupational health assessment process. They will have to pay for this as it is private work.

You are also able to request a copy of your medical summary from us if you would find this useful.

We would suggest that you review the latest government advice - <https://www.gov.uk/guidance/working-safely-during-coronavirus-covid-19> about working environments prior to your discussions with your employer.

Yours sincerely,

The Partners
